

Americans should listen to Mourdock's warning

Perhaps Richard Mourdock's words should be thoughtfully considered before being so quickly condemned by the media. It takes great courage to speak the truth when it means the end of your political career.

Instead of condemnation, Mourdock should be a new chapter added to John F. Kennedy's "Profiles in Courage." America, in a race to its own destruction, should consider the warnings voiced by Mourdock before it's too late to change its course.

In the words of George Orwell:
"The further a society drifts from the truth, the more it will hate those who speak it."

Ken Koehler
Indianapolis